

COMMUNICATION ISSUES

IN AOTEAROA NEW ZEALAND

A Collection of Research Essays

edited by
Giles Dodson
Evangelia Papoutsaki
ePress
Unitec

CONTENTS

PAGES

PREFACE DR DIANA BOSSIO

iii - iv

INTRODUCTION

REPRESENTATION AND VOICE

in a complex communication environment

1 - 4

GILES DODSON & EVANGELIA PAPOUTSAKI

ESSAY ONE

COMMUNICATING SOCIAL CHANGE

Politics and immigrants

5 - 16

PRUE CRUICKSHANK

ESSAY TWO

THE MIGRANT AND THE MEDIA

Maintaining cultural identity through ethnic media

17 - 37

SANDRA NORONHA, EVANGELIA PAPOUTSAKI

ESSAY THREE

RACE, RACISM AND EVERYDAY COMMUNICATION

in Aotearoa New Zealand

38 - 51

ELIZABETH REVELL, EVANGELIA PAPOUTSAKI, ELENA KOLESOVA

ESSAY FOUR

“COOL” ASIA IN A LOCAL CONTEXT

East Asian popular culture in a New Zealand classroom

52 - 61

ELENA KOLESOVA

ESSAY FIVE

MOVING FORWARD, KEEPING THE PAST IN FRONT OF US

Treaty settlements, conservation co-governance and communication

62 - 73

GILES DODSON

ESSAY SIX PUBLIC RELATIONS IN NEW ZEALAND The missing pieces LYNNE TRENWITH	74 - 79
ESSAY SEVEN NEW ZEALAND ONLINE What's happened to our Digital Strategy? JOCELYN WILLIAMS	80 - 94
ESSAY EIGHT REPOSITIONING THE ORAL HISTORY INTERVIEW Reciprocal peer interviewing within a transgenerational frame SARA DONAGHEY	95 - 105
ESSAY NINE ALL THE SUFFERING ON OUR BACKS Rugby, religion and redemption amid the ruins PHILIP CASS	106 - 120
CONTRIBUTORS	121 - 123

CONTRIBUTORS

Philip Cass PhD is a Senior Lecturer in the Department of Communication Studies at Unitec Institute of Technology. Philip's principle research interests are Pacific and Middle East media and the relationship between religion and the media. He has a long career in teaching and practicing journalism in the Pacific and Arab states. Philip has recently published his first book, Press, Politics and People in Papua New Guinea, 1950-1975.

Contact: pcass@unitec.ac.nz

Prue Cruickshank PhD is a lecturer in the Department of Communication Studies at Unitec Institute of Technology. She has completed her PhD on The Social, Cultural and Human Capital of Intentional Immigrant Entrepreneurs. This work builds on her involvement with the international Global Entrepreneurship Monitoring (GEM) project and networking research. Prue's other research foci include holistic experiential action learning in teams.

Contact: pcruickshank@unitec.ac.nz

Giles Dodson PhD is a lecturer and researcher at the Department of Communication Studies, Unitec Institute of Technology, and an associate editor at Unitec's ePress, with a research focus on community driven conservation and resource management, particularly in cross-cultural contexts. Giles Dodson is currently the Chief Investigator on several projects, including a related Unitec Teaching Integrated Research Fund project, advancing integrated environmental management through cross-cultural dialogue in Northland. Giles's recent research focuses on community engagement, marine reserve campaigning and Treaty of Waitangi issues, as well as on political engagement, social media and international communication.

Contact: gdodson@unitec.ac.nz

Sara Donaghey PhD is a Senior Lecturer and Programme Leader in the Department of Communication Studies, Unitec Institute of Technology. She has a PhD in cultural heritage management and is a specialist in historical research and oral history narratives. She was one of the principal researchers for a project recording the experiences of first generation Dutch immigrants to New Zealand in the 1950s; her more recent research explores lesbian identity viewed through the eyes of younger and older lesbians to contrast and compare their experiences. She is currently leading a collaborative transmedia project linking undergraduate students, oral historians, local government and the community.

Contact: sdonaghey@unitec.ac.nz

Elena Kolesova PhD is a Senior Lecturer and a Programme Leader for Postgraduate programmes in the Department of Communication Studies at Unitec Institute of Technology, where she teaches courses in Asian Studies and in Intercultural Communication. Her research interests include the re-emergence of nationalism in Japan and Russia via popular culture. In 2011 she co-organised a Cool New Asia international symposium followed by the ePublication Cool New Asia: Asian Popular Culture in Local Context. She is involved in research on international or transnational education and international students and has published in the area of the history of Japanese education, international students and a comparative analysis of history textbooks in Japan and Russia. She is the Reviews Editor for the New Zealand Journal of Asian Studies.

Contact: ekolesova@unitec.ac.nz

Sandra Noronha MBA is a Marketing Communications professional at Beca. Her previous position was with Vision Asia NZ Ltd, a leading ethnic media company in the ANZ region. Her professional background stems from the media and entertainment industry in India, having worked with leading media houses The Times of India and UTV Disney. A graduate of the postgraduate program in International Communication at Unitec Institute of Technology, she is passionate about intercultural communication and communication for social change.

Contact: sandra.jn@gmail.com

Evangelia Papoutsaki PhD is an Associate Professor in the Department of Communication Studies at Unitec Institute of Technology; Research Associate at the Pacific Media Centre, AUT and Editor in Chief of Unitec ePress. Her professional background and research interests are on communication for development and social change and diasporas and their media. She has extensive experience in the Pacific and former Soviet Union and involvement in major research projects [Chief co-investigator of PACMAS research consortium that conducted a 14 Pacific Islands State of the Media and Communication research project; Komuniti Tok Piksa HIV/AIDs ethnographic action project in PNG]; Co-founder of the Contemporary PNG Studies Journal and former Reviews Editor of the Pacific Journalism Review. She has published three edited volumes on Pacific and PNG communication and development issues.

Contact: epapoutsaki@unitec.ac.nz

Elizabeth Revell is the Recipient of a 2010 Unitec post-graduate scholarship. Elizabeth studied in the Communication department between 2010 and 2012, graduating with a Master of International Communication. Her final thesis was titled 'The Everyday Communication of Race in New Zealand' and focused on how the idea of race is banally reproduced through ordinary, day-to-day communication acts in New Zealand. For this, she used an exploratory partial collaborative autoethnographic methodology involving diaries, interviews and focus groups. Academically, her interests have been political theory, intercultural communication, and strategic communication, with particular inclination towards critical perspectives and soft-power struggles.

Contact: elizabeth.s.revell@gmail.com

LynneTrenwith combines lecturing in the Department of Communication Studies at Unitec Institute of Technology with work in the not for profit sector. A career of leadership, change management, advising, mentoring, problem solving, strategy, professional development, management and governance in education and not-for-profit sectors, is combined with education, writing, research, publication and conference presenting focused in the field of communication. Specific interests in the communication field are in organizational and intercultural communication; her current research project is the history of public relations and PRINZ in New Zealand.

Contact: ltrenwith@unitec.ac.nz

Jocelyn Williams PhD is Senior Lecturer and Head of the Department of Communication Studies at Unitec Institute of Technology. Her main research focus is the relationship between internet use and community outcomes, reflecting an interest in inclusion and participation for democracy, resilient communities, well-considered response to change, and just social outcomes. Other academic roles have included being President of the Australian and New Zealand Communication Association (ANZCA) in 2008-2009, and a continuing role as a New Zealand representative on the Executive of ANZCA. Publications include a 2013 book chapter, 'Social cohesion and free home internet in New Zealand' in A. Abdelaal's Social and economic effects of community wireless networks and infrastructures and a 2011 article 'Research informing practice: Toward effective engagement in community ICT in New Zealand' in the Journal of Community Informatics Special Issue.

Contact: jwilliams@unitec.ac.nz

